GOSPEL REFLECTION: Matthew 21:33-43

Jesus is speaking to the religious leaders. He and they knew well the oracle of Isaiah which we heard in the first reading.

The story begins the same way, but then branches off as the owner leases the vineyard to tenants. Suddenly the story is no longer about the response of God's people but about the stewardship of its leaders. It becomes very personal as the tenants are shown to be exploitative, violent and selfish. They will come to a wretched end.

Matthew builds in further elements of allegory as well. The Son who is killed is Jesus. The other tenants who will take over the vineyard are the new people of God, the Church. This makes sense of both the imagery of the rejected stone that becomes the keystone, and also the saying about taking the kingdom of God away to be given to those who will produce its fruit.

We can imagine that the religious leaders were not amused to hear this scathing parable. So, the tension mounts as Jesus moves towards the cross.
